Form 990, Part III, Line 1 - Organization Mission

CPJ promotes press freedom worldwide and defends the right of journalists to report the news without fear of reprisal. CPJ ensures the free flow of news and commentary by taking action wherever journalists are attacked, imprisoned, killed, kidnapped, threatened, censored, or harassed. Hundreds of journalists are killed, harassed, or imprisoned every year. For 30 years, the Committee to Protect Journalists has been there to defend them worldwide.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4a - Program Service Accomplishments

The Committee to Protect Journalists promotes press freedom worldwide and defends the right of journalists to report the news without fear of reprisal. CPJ ensures the free flow of news and commentary by taking action wherever journalists are attacked, imprisoned, killed, kidnapped, threatened, censored, or harassed.

Since its establishment in 1981, CPJ has grown to be a leader in the global press freedom movement. The organization is distinguished by the high quality of its reporting, a reputation for political independence, decades of experience, and an influential board of directors.

Its professional staff of journalists and regional experts report on press freedom violations, advocate for reforms, and provide emergency aid to journalists at risk.

CPJ pursues direct engagement with government officials—including meetings with heads of state—to secure results. The organization's reporting is routinely used as the basis for protests and appeals by a range of influential actors, such as other international human rights groups, political leaders, and diplomats. CPJ's reporting is amplified by major media coverage. All of its published work is available online at cpj.org.

CPJ operates five regional programs and does thematic work around Internet Advocacy, Journalist Security, and Journalist Assistance. We run longer-term advocacy projects, including a campaign against impunity for journalist murders and a campaign to free imprisoned journalists. The organization has expanded its global reach to respond to the greater demand for its services. CPJ's International Program Network includes team members in Mexico City, Bogotá, São Paulo, London, Brussels, Moscow, Istanbul, Cairo, Abuja, Nairobi, Bangkok, and Hong Kong. The Africa program is led by a program coordinator based in Cape Town. In 2013, CPJ formed a regional advisory board in Latin America made up of leading journalists to provide strategic guidance.

Press freedom around the world is at risk as never before, with record numbers of journalists coming under attack. CPJ is also responding to a widening range of threats to free expression—including digital censorship and surveillance on an unprecedented scale. CPJ now serves a broader constituency of journalists—including growing numbers of freelancers, bloggers, and citizen journalists. This new generation of independent journalists typically works with little to no institutional support. They rely on CPJ for solid reporting on press freedom conditions, high-level advocacy to end abuses, and direct aid in emergency situations.

In 2013, CPJ carried out missions and special projects focused on Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Russia, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, Iran, Iraqi Kurdistan, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Burma, China, Vietnam, Kenya, Tanzania, and Uganda. CPJ also published its first-ever comprehensive report on the United States, examining the chilling effect of widespread surveillance and the administration's war on leaks.

Through its work in 2013, CPJ

- helped win the early release of 43 imprisoned journalists
- provided emergency aid to 153 journalists at risk
- put the issue of impunity for journalist murders on the United Nations agenda
- strengthened government accountability in Mexico for attacks on the press
- drew international attention to Turkey's record as the world's leading jailer of journalists
- exposed the unprecedented threats to press freedom in the U.S.

Syria remained the most deadly place for journalists on the job in 2013. At least 65 journalists have been killed in the course of reporting on the conflict since 2011.

Ninety percent of those journalists were locals, including large numbers of citizen journalists who used digital tools to get news to the outside world. More than 70

Syrian journalists have been forced into exile. In 2013, CPJ established the Syria Response Group with a dozen other organizations to coordinate emergency aid, advocate on behalf of exiled journalists with the United Nations refugee agency and host governments, and produce an online resource center for journalists reporting in Syria.

Worldwide, CPJ documented the cases of 70 journalists killed in 2013. CPJ maintains a database with detailed records on journalist deaths in 1992. The organization applies strict journalistic standards when investigating each case to determine whether a death was work-related. CPJ's data is widely used by journalists, activists, and policymakers.

CPJ stepped up its Global Campaign Against Impunity to ensure that the killers of journalists are brought to justice. The organization pushed for implementation of the United Nations action plan on impunity, which incorporates many of CPJ's recommendations. In July 2013, CPJ Vice Chair Kathleen Carroll addressed a historic UN Security Council open debate on the protection of journalists. In December, the General Assembly approved a resolution to make the International Day to End Impunity an official UN day, thanks to intensive advocacy by CPJ and other groups. CPJ has received political commitments to tackle impunity in meetings with heads of state in Mexico, Pakistan, and the Philippines and with senior officials in Russia and Brazil. In 2013, CPJ documented a record number of six prosecutions in journalist murder cases. CPJ also welcomed passage of legislation in Mexico to make crimes against free expression a federal offense, a long-sought reform to strengthen accountability for attacks on the press.

CPJ's campaign to Free the Press works secure the release of imprisoned journalists through a combination of sustained reporting, strategic advocacy, and targeted assistance. This work is urgently needed as the number of imprisoned journalists has grown in recent years. There were 211 journalists behind bars at the time of our 2013 prison census, the second worst year on record. That grim tally would have been even higher without international advocacy. In 2013, CPJ's efforts contributed to the early release of 43 imprisoned journalists worldwide.

Turkey was the world's leading jailer of journalists, surpassing the records of notoriously repressive states including Iran and China. CPJ carried out high-level advocacy to pursue recommendations made in its 2012 report exposing Turkey's Press Freedom Crisis. Prospects for reform stalled when the Turkish government used brute force to put down massive demonstrations that erupted in late May. During the turbulent summer months, CPJ documented dozens of attacks on journalists, mostly by police attempting to obstruct coverage of the protests. In September, CPJ carried out a high-level mission to meet with government officials and journalists. The delegation received a pledge from the Justice Ministry to provide information about all imprisoned journalists included on CPJ's list. In November, CPJ gave its International Press Freedom Award to Nedim Sener, a leading investigative journalist who was imprisoned for a year without trial and granted conditional release due to CPJ advocacy.

CPJ is building up its Internet Advocacy program to confront emerging threats to press freedom online, provide technical advice to journalists on digital security, and advocate with governments and corporations to protect freedom of expression in the digital age. Following media revelations about massive digital surveillance led by the U.S. National Security Agency (NSA), CPJ joined an unprecedented coalition of leading Internet companies and civil liberties activists to urge Washington to be more transparent about the scale of its surveillance programs. In October, CPJ issued its first comprehensive report on press freedom conditions in the U.S.: "The Obama Administration and the Press: Leak investigations and surveillance in post -9/11 America." The report, written by Leonard Downie Jr., former executive editor of The Washington Post, documented the chilling effect of unchecked surveillance in the U.S. and abroad. CPJ issued a series of recommendations alongside the report and is pushing for reforms.

CPJ reached out to journalists around the world to raise awareness about the critical importance of digital security, a major focus of its Journalist Security Guide (available at cpj.org in Arabic, English, French, Russian, Somali, and Spanish). The guide is intended to help journalists navigate the growing dangers of reporting. It includes chapters on covering conflict, crime, civil disturbances, and natural disasters. The section on risk assessment features the organization's pioneering research on sexual violence against journalists. The guide has been used in a variety of training workshops, including in Somalia, the most dangerous country in Africa for journalists.

CPJ scaled up emergency aid to journalists at risk. In 2013, its Journalist Assistance program helped 153 journalists—providing support for urgent medical treatment, legal defense, and refugee claims. CPJ responded to an influx of cases from the Middle East amid ongoing conflict and political unrest. CPJ convened a major conference with partner groups in 2013 to improve aid to the growing numbers of Syrian journalists forced into exile (see above).

CPJ has strengthened its ability to carry out longer-term, strategic advocacy and campaigning to secure changes in law, policy, and practice affecting press freedom. CPJ's high profile enables the organization to shine an international spotlight on press freedom abuses and build pressure for reforms. Journalists have told CPJ that its advocacy efforts helped secure their release from prison, forced officials to back down from efforts to intimidate them into silence, and literally saved their lives.

Form 990, Part VI, Line 11b - Form 990 Review Process
